

Richard Holton

Cambridge University

What's the good of pleasure?

Abstract:

The incentive salience account of desire suggests that desire and pleasure are distinct. If that is right, what is the role of pleasure? Balleine and Dickinson have argued that it sits at the cognitive-motivational interface. I explore the ramifications of this account, and ask what it says about the implementation of self-control.